Why Choose CashCourse?

Young adults have little financial autonomy until they reach the age of eighteen. At that point, they start to make choices that can affect them for decades. Schools, parents and even the federal government expect them to responsibly navigate student loans, credit cards and budgeting. But most teenagers are not empowered with a basic understanding of personal finance.

CashCourse can help. It addresses students' big challenges and everyday financial concerns through short lessons designed to fit into busy schedules.

The Higher Education Financial Wellness Alliance (HEFWA) is a network of professionals and institutions driven to advancing student success through financial wellness.

Since 2007, CashCourse has helped institutions empower students to make informed financial decisions. Now, it is getting a major upgrade.

HEFWA is excited to announce the new and improved CashCourse. Developed in partnership with Student Connections, the redesigned platform offers a fresh user experience, modern tools, and smarter reporting — all grounded in feedback from students and administrators.
